JURY SELECTION CONTINUES

[STRIKE THAT- MR. Laeser has written in to inform us that Openings are Monday morning.]

Our favourite federal blogger has a post this week on jury selection in federal court and several comments spoke about the differences between voire dire in federal and state court.

Jury selection resumes on Monday before Judge William Thomas in one of the more horrific allegations of kidnapping, sexual assault, and murder that Miami has seen in many years. Abe Laeser and Laura Adams for the prosecution, while former Major Crimes Prosecutor Gary Rosenberg and new defense super-star Joel Denaro are for the defense in this death penalty prosecution. You couldn't find four better lawyers anywhere and this trial is worth watching.

See You In Court.

This blog was supposed to be about the REGB only and now has a bunch of news from all over the place. What gives? This is turning into BS. Rumpole, are you Susanna Nessmith or another sorry writer trying to get a story?

New Books in Homestead has a symposium tonight, with a very well known miami civil litigator talking about his article in the next issue of the legal journal about litigating against mentally unstable pro se litigants. 8-9:30 tonight, and copies of the article are available for signings.
